Mara Daniels is a physicist doing cutting-edge research into the nature of reality at the University of Chicago. She's an astronomer. She's an amateur student of Chinese philosophy. And she's still recovering from last summer's car crash that killed Benjamin Zhu, her fiancé. It's a slow process; she can walk without a cane now, but she still suffers from migraines, nightmares, and seeing Zhu's ghost everywhere she goes. Then one day, everything begins to unravel.
