During their medical training, obstetrician Daniel Durand broke her heart. Now, after years of silence, he shows up with a little girl and a surprise.

Dr. Sarah Matthews has every reason to mistrust Daniel when he joins her California medical group. Why did he suddenly break off their relationship, and why has he moved back into her town and her life?

An egg donor during medical school, Sarah wanted to help a family desperate for a child. She never learned whether any children were born, but the process—she had to take hormones and abstain from sex—drove Daniel away. That doesn't say much for him, in her opinion, yet he's become a devoted father to his orphaned niece.

Sarah feels the strangest sense of connection to the little girl. Is there more to Daniel, and to five-year-old Nina's story, than he's willing to share? This novelette was written by the USA Today bestselling author of more than 95 published novels.
